Mike Falk: The facility that we are going to see here treats the water for the entire region for over 1.4 million people.

Mike Falk: All the solids associated with that, the pollutants would all flow directly to the river, and it would be catastrophic.

Mike Falk: Most of technologies in place for filtering the water were certified at UC Davis. Federal funding is helping advance the science to inform the decision making. Keeping that funding in place is essential.